1. The former German cavalry barracks, "Prinz basen", situated at Wrocław-Grabiszynek (Dreslau) on ul. Boronowicka, are being used as warehouses for Polish Army Signal Corps units. The barracks were heavily damaged during World War II and as of October 1953 had not been reconstructed. Four warehouses are currently in use. Some Polish officers, who are in charge of the warehouses, and a guard detachment are housed in the barracks. (Date of observation: 1948-1953)

2. A Russian infantry unit occupies the barracks situated at Wrocław-Karłowice, on the left side of the railroad Wrocław-Glewnica. The barracks consist of five two-storyed buildings, two three-storyed buildings, six warehouses and garages. A military hospital is to be erected in the barracks' area. A Polish army officer's school is located in two three-storyed buildings situated across the street from the barracks. (Date of observation: 1949-August 1953)

3. The barracks at Wrocław-Oporów, located on the right side of the Wrocław-Sadkow road, are occupied by a unit of the Russian army, probably infantry. The barracks comprise nine one-storyed wooden buildings. A large agricultural farm belongs to this unit and is managed exclusively by officers of this unit, who are assigned especially for this purpose. (Date of observation: 1949-1951)

4. The barracks at Wrocław-Wojcice consist of twelve one-storyed brick barracks and about three or four sheds resembling garages. It is fenced off from the road by a high brick wall. the barracks were occupied by a Russian armored unit, but never saw any weapons or equipment there. The barracks are located at Wojcice near the junction of the roads to Ołtarzyn and Eckendorf. (Date of observation: 1949-May 1952)

5. The Polish army barracks at Wrocław-Rosanka consist of eight three-storyed buildings and ten two-storyed buildings, and about 20 stores, workshops, and garages. They were formerly German army barracks and are located two kilometers north of the outskirts of Wrocław on the left side of the Wrocław-Swiniany main road. The barracks have been occupied by a Polish armored unit since 1948. Tanks were engaged in training operations almost every day during the time of observation. All buildings which were damaged during the war have been either reconstructed or repaired. (Date of observation: March-August 1950)
